

Electrical Repair Company Charges Pinnacle with Finding Qualified Workers

For most business owners, there are dozens of tasks that can keep them up worrying at night. From marketing and accounting, to insurance and taxes, there's always something that can take hours to manage during the day. But finding new and qualified employees doesn't have to be one of them.

For Jason Wright, owner of Jason Wright Electric (JWE), he has eliminated part of this concern by partnering with Pinnacle Staffing Group to find some key people for his team.

The hardest part of the hiring process, despite offering "a good workplace culture and providing quality benefits and pay" is "finding qualified applicants and spending the time to weed out the bad candidates," Wright said.

By helping with this part of his business, Wright can spend his time managing his crew of technicians.

"With other companies, we have had bad experiences in the past with communication, lack of quality workers and just an overall bad experience." Wright said.

Pinnacle is “careful with making sure that when (they) send us a worker, that they are able to perform the job we need,” he said.

JWE’s Office Manager, Hannah Wright, shares the owner’s perspective, stating that Pinnacle “is very thorough and genuinely cares how the process is going.”

It’s that constant communication – a true partnership in your future – that sets Pinnacle apart from other staffing agencies.

Pinnacle is “very hands-on and attentive every step of the way,” Wright said.

“...attentive every step of the way.”
